Anna wanted a break after a long study session. She packed her laptop and notebook and left her apartment. The sun was warm, and the streets were quiet. She walked slowly toward her favorite café, enjoying the fresh air. It was a peaceful morning, and she felt relaxed for the first time in days.

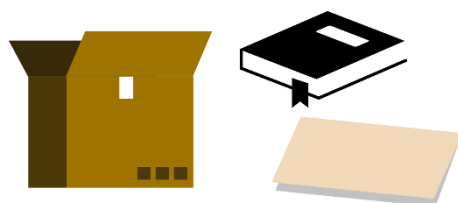

As she reached the café, she noticed something strange. A small box was sitting on one of the outdoor tables. It was wrapped in brown paper. There was no name, no address, and no label. Anna looked around, but no one seemed to notice the box. Feeling curious, she picked it up carefully and carried it inside. She ordered a coffee and found a seat near the window.

A man was sitting there, reading and drinking coffee. He did not seem to notice anything. Anna stayed at her seat, pretending to look at her phone. After some time, the man closed his book and left the café. Anna waited until he was gone.

Then, she stood up and walked slowly toward table 7. She bent down and looked under the table. There was something taped to the bottom.

Her heart started to beat faster. Should she take it? Was this some kind of joke? Anna looked around. The café was peaceful, and no one watched her. She reached out her hand, but she stopped halfway. She was not sure what to do next.
